OUR QUARRY

A Story Worth Telling

Down a winding road, tucked away in Canon City, Colorado, just south of the nationally known Garden Park Fossil Area, lies the Four Mile Sandstone quarry. This remarkable site has produced one-of-a-kind, high-quality sandstone slabs since the 1990s.

What was once under water became layers of accumulating sands. Over time, the ancient terrain transformed into sandstone. As the earth's formations were driven upward — creating the large formations and canyons that define this region — the sandstone was exposed to the elements, revealing the rich colors and textures we quarry today.

Some slabs carry distinctive "ripple marks" — patterns created by waves of water that once existed here. The sand contained organic compounds that, through the sedimentary process, chemically changed into iron pyrite spheres and streaks, giving each slab its one-of-a-kind coloring.

RARE BY NATURE

Limited by design

Four Mile Sandstone is not mass-produced. Each piece is carefully extracted from a single Colorado quarry, making every rock a limited offering from a finite natural resource. The unique geological conditions that created this stone exist nowhere else — once it's gone, it's gone. This is stone that was masterfully made by the hand of the Creator and naturally cut by the organic mining process. When you choose Four Mile Sandstone, you're choosing a product with a story, a heritage, and a character that cannot be replicated. Truly limited quantities of Colorado's finest natural stone.

MORE THAN A QUARRY

Community Oriented

Today the quarry produces thousands of tons of sandstone for residential and commercial use. But the owners of Four Mile have a heart for service. They've partnered with local churches and community organizations to offer job opportunities to friends in need. Their passion for serving the community is a testament to who they are as individuals. The Four Mile Sandstone quarry is more than just a quarry — it carries a portion of our earth's history and a commitment to bettering others and their community.
